SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 1.

ROBESPIERRE TAKEN TO THE GUILLOTINE -As they went along, throngs crowded about the cart to see the felien tyrant, and the gendarmes pointed him out with their swords. He was pursued by the howling mob, who had formerly yelled as farcely as his victims, and now charged him with the blood of them all. Troops of we-men who had canced at the deaths of those that be had sent to the reaffold, now danced the Car magnolo round the care as it caused before the hou e of Dupleix where he had lived A woman, breaking from the crowd, rushed close to him, exclaiming; 'Murderer of all my kindred your agony his me with transport Descend to Hades, pursued by the curses of every mother in France!" When they reached the place of execution, Bobespierre was first shown to the peer e, and then laid down on the weaffold with the body and nearly dead bedies of his brother and Herrict. The tatch consisted of twenty-one, and K bespierre was executed

When he was raised up to be led to the guillotine, he presented a most ghastly figure—his sky blue cost covered with blood and dirt, his stockings slipped dow. so ut his beets, his face livid as death, and tied up in a bandage. The executioner plucked the bandage way, and let the jaw fall. He gave a yell which struck every beart with horror, and the maxt moment was put under the ax. Samson held up the hideous head to the cecple, who shouted with delight, and then wentaway singing. One poor man, as he gized on that head, said: "Yes. Robespierre, ou said true—there is a God!"—Cassell's Illustrated Hist ry of Luglan !
